- March, 5th, 1770
- This is outrageous! I am a 17 years old boy that is in a rich family, which was sent by the British to colonize in America. My name is Henry. We went to the King Street, seeking for a peaceful way to talk about the ridiculous stamp act that the King issued upon us. The stamp act was the act that the king issued, the king wanted to increase the tax on any writing related tools, ink, pen, paper and many more, and is the reason why this massacre happened. How am I supposed to write? I am writing right now, and it is costing me quite a bloody lot because of this freaking dumb act. They said that the act was for us to pay our debt because of the British protection they gave us during the 7-year-war, against the French and the local Indians, the war that my beloved father fought bravely. My father was a commander on the frontlines the manliest of the manliest soldiers. He once rode a horse and taking his sword and rifle with him, raising his sword out in his left hand, struck the French with his mighty strength. The British wants us to pay for what WE colonist did. Those British soldiers, I just want to kill those red coat lobster backs. Today's massacre will always be in my mind, I call it the Boston Massacre, the moment we started to chant for freedom, the commander said fire and killed my five friends while everyone was fleeing the streets.
- The taxes rose unreasonably and now I look back at the massacre. The red coats were aiming at us, as if we are just some type of target that they practice shooting with. Those ruthless money-sucking bullocks, taking peoples freedom. If people are not able to afford the high taxes, they will go to jail. Think about their family, the children! They have to live without their father taking care of them. This is absolutely taxation without representation. The idiotic king later issued the sugar act, and it was at our lowest economic status. Many people were broke and it influenced many people, especially for the import and export business. They had to pay so much to do what they do and many smugglers could not smuggle items because it was too risky because of the new sugar act. Samuel Adams and John Otis, both from Massachusetts, were two major people who wanted to get rid of the Sugar Act. I believe that they are the right and the British are the wrong, I will follow what they believe is right for us. I was walking along the streets when I overheard two men saying they were going to raid a British ship. When I heard that, I was excited so I walked over to them and asked what they were planning to do. They explained the entire plan to me; I would walk up to the ship and do what they tell me to do. The Boston Tea Party will be fun.
